the crew of the ill-fated steamer Rodgers, furnishes additional details of the voyages the Rodgers, Captain Berry, left San Franeisco to make a search for the Jeannette. She sailed hence direct for Petropaulovski, paulovski, were agreeably surprised on arriving there to find a beautiful green shore, with plenty of trees and shrubbery, and the weather quite warm and pleasant. They arrived there on the 19th of July, and obtained forty-five sledge dogs and a quantity of reindeer clothing, and then went over to one of the ports of the Northwestern Trading Company, in charge of Mr. Greenfield, who also showed them great kindness. There an additional supply of rein-deer skin clothing was obtained, and also some dressed seal skins, for making sealskin boats. They also procured a native kyak, or boat, capable of carrying three persons. The Rodgers filled up with coal, having sent up in advance about two hundred tons. Leaving St. Michaels, the Rodgers got under way for Plover Bay, on the Siberian side, and about three hundred miles distant, almost due west, for the purpose of picking up a native named John Cornelius, who had been for some time in the United States, and could speak English. They found, on arriving there, nowever, that he had gone up into the Arctic Ocean on a whaleship. After remaining one night in Plover Bay, the steamer left for St. Lawrence Bay. One of the main objects in going to St. Lawrence Bay was to inquire of the natives whether they had night, and at daylight the following morn-ing got into a fog, in which the Strelock was lost sight of. The Rodgers pushed along the northeast coast of Siberia about seventy-five miles, to a native village, at

had been heard of her, nor of any vessel Captain Berry pushed on for Herald Island to search for some vestige of the Jeannette's visit there. They remained at Herald Island about three or four hours, long enough to make a thorough search, then steamed away for Wrangell Land, the nearest point of which was about forty miles distant, though further south, where the Rodgers struck it, was about 150 miles. About noon the next day, after leaving Herald Island, ice was encountered fifteen miles from Wrangell Land. The vessel was worked through it, and dropped her anchor about a quarter of a mile from shore. The land before them was supposed to be a continent, and with a view to making an ex-tensive exploration of it, and search for traces of the Jeannette's men, two parties were sent out in boats to follow the coast in opposite directions. One of these parties was to go round the south, west and north sides, and the other was to go east and north as far as possible along the coast. It was a part of Captain Berry's purpose to determine, if possible, whether Wrangell Land was really a continent or only an island. Mr. Waring's boat rounded the southeast point, and, skirting along the S. GERSON & CO., 昌 MESSRS. L. L. LEWIS & CO. Sacramento: 1 am to-day visiting the immense works of the Michigan Stove Company, which is, beyond a coubt, the largest Stove Works in the world. To give one an idea of the amount of work done by them, I will state that they turn out, all finished and ready for use, 200 "GARLAND" RANGES per day, besides many other patterns of STOVES AND RANGES. Mr. J. Dwyer, Manager of the Company, tells me that even this very large number of "GARLAND" RANGES often does not fill the many orders received for them from different sections of the country. The Company has in their employ at this time about 2,500 men; but expects before 1883 to increase the force to 3,500. I have just ordered another carload of "GARLAND" RANGES AND STOVES. You may expect them about JULY 20th next. I am now on my way to the principal manufactories in the
